Hexagon fall guys glitch

This article is a stub. Help your Fall Guys: Ultimate Knockout Wiki by expanding it. Hex-A-Gone is one of the rounds in Fall Guys: Ultimate Knockout. This round is a final round and was first introduced in the beta version. According to the game website, Hex-A-Gone was designed by Meg Ralph. If the round lasts 5 minutes, all remaining players will receive a crown. However, barring exceptional circumstances, the chances of this happening lawfully are slim. In-game descriptions[edit | edit source] Objective Last one standing! Description Be the last Fall Guy standing above the Slime! Course description[edit | edit source] Standard version[edit | edit source] Players begin the round that hovers just above speckled hexagonal platforms. After a three-second countdown, all players are dropped on their platform. When a platform is touched, the sinking will turn a white hue and disappear shortly thereafter. Beneath a number of larger and larger hexagon layers is a game-ending pink slime. When a player touches the mucus, they are disqualified. The last player alive will earn the crown. Course changes[edit | source] In Season 2, tiles are differently represented. Known Bugs[edit | edit source] Phasing Through* From 8/8/20: Sometimes due to desync in the client and server or due to collision errors, a player can phase through hexagons that are on the players' screen. Other players in the server could see those hexagons as already fallen, or they could also see them phasing through. This would lead to an unfair loss. Overcrowded Hex* From unknown date: In extremely rare cases, the game can select this round unusually early, when there are still too many players left. Multiple players will be placed on the same hex tile, and when the round begins, players will share space with others to be quickly hurled from their starting point.* This name is a conjectural name and is not somewhat uniformly agreed upon. Strategy (This section should be expanded)[edit | edit source] It is almost universally agreed that this is the game with the most room for strategy. There are several good strategies here: Running (Balanced)[edit | edit source] When near other players, it's best to run and try to knock other players into the bottom tiers. This makes it so that more tiles will be cleared, making it more dangerous to walk. Overfilling (Aggressive)[edit | source] You also go directly to the bottom layers and set traps for other players. This works even better when a player above you through a layer, which means you follow their path and when they run out of tiles, they will fall down two or even more layers. Endurance-based (edit | edit source) When there are few or no players at your level, you can jump between the tiles to slow them down as slowly as possible Be warned that trappers can eat the tiles under you while doing this! Survival Variant[edit | edit source] A Survival type variant was introduced in the Hex-a-gone Trials playlist on op 5, 2021. In this variant, the round ends when only a certain number of players are eliminated, leaving 75% players after Round 1, and 60% of the remaining players after Round 2. Use almost all of the same strategies for this version, but be warned that the first larger number of players can make things trickier. A fairly common strategy is to fall to the lowest level and cut huge holes in the tiles to trap other unsuspecting players. Medal thresholds[edit | edit source] Gold - Winner! (or Qualified, if Survival-type variant is played) No medal - Eliminated Trivia[edit | edit source] According to senior designer Joe Walsh, Hex-A-Gone was inspired by the Minecraft minigame TNT Run. [1] Hex-A-Gone was temporarily removed from spin at the beginning of Season 3 due to a physiosect. Fall Guys players can embrace their inner animal with a great MrBeast skin, resembling its iconic logo. It is available in the item store from December 26 to December 29. Jimmy "MrBeast" Donaldson has become a household name over the past few years. His philanthropy, charity work and ambitious efforts include everything from record-breaking giveaways to opening burger chains. Earlier this year, he teamed up with Tyler "Ninja" Blevins, C2 Esports and Aim.Lab and donated $1 million to Special Effect, a uk-based charity that helps people with physical disabilities play games. It happened as part of Fall Guys' "Battle of the Brands" competition, which was a special event meant to raise money for charity in the form of bids. In exchange for their efforts, Mediatonic promised the highest bidders they will receive their own Fall Guys costumes. Ninja has already got his skin, and it's already become a popular choice. Like Agent Smith in The Matrix, ninja Jelly Beans are populated entire servers. Now players can also get their hands on MrBeast's costume. YouTube: MrBeastMrBeast is one of the most charitable and philanthropic personalities and content creators on the Internet. How to get MrBeast's Fall Guys skin just like Ninja's Fall Guys skin, MrBeast's is available in two pieces. The top half is a blue wolf's head, complete with purple lightning bolts on either side of his eyes. It also has sharp teeth enveloping the Jelly Bean's face. It's a direct reference to its official logo. The second piece is a black and blue hoodie with the logo the breast. It also has two pink drawstrings and matching trousers. They both cost one crown each, which means you get the whole piece for just two crowns. It's happening!@MrBeastYT can now be seen in Fall Guys! Plus, it gives Fall Guys players a chance to get their hands on some limited skins. Each event in this summer's sensational new battle royale/game show hybrid, Fall Guys, puts you in the shoes of a jelly-shaped contestant competing for the last man in a zany obstacle course. One particular event, Hex-a-Gone, involves a tower full of hexagonal panels that evaporate as soon as someone steps on them. To fall into the pit of mucus far below means you lose. But what if we tell you that more than one person can walk away with the winning Crown in Hex-a-Gone? Redditor Glenn1792 posted a video on the Fall Guys subreddit on Tuesday showing how she and their friend tied for first place in the mini-game. Normally, the last player will still be hopping over the panels just keep going until they fall. But this duo got lucky and started the round with only three other players, making it pretty easy for them to secure a spot as the last two. From there they played so well that the game ended before one of them fell to the bottom. Since they are the only two left, both players slowly jumped between the remaining falling panels while carefully trying to avoid bumping into each other. They were able to avoid death for so long that the round hidden five minute timer ran to zero and named them both winners. We both [got] our Crown respectively, wrote Glenn1792. On my screen, it showed him getting the Crown while on his it showed me getting the crown. Inverse reached out to Fall Guys developer, Mediatonic, for comment, but did not hear back in time for publication. This probably means that it is technically possible for even more simultaneous winners if everyone in the game played slowly enough. But there is no in-game notification that Hex-a-Gone is on a timer, many players tend to speed over the panels trying to drop the competition through before they do. It's unclear if Hex-a-Gone is a secret. Is. is something Mediatonic will eventually remove or if it is here to stay, but it makes sense to have a timer for the final round. In this way, cheaters who have been caught drifting and flying by Fall Guys can't indefinitely stall a round of Hex-a-Gone. But this built-in clock can be abused now that more people know. Watch below! MediatonicEly squad of players can try and go for a draw win, even if it takes a few tries. You have to consistently make it to the final round to even have a chance, and then you have to hope that the game puts you in a round of Hex-a-Gone. From there, it's all about how slowly you jump from platform to platform, dodging all the other players in the round and making sure you have a safe place to land before jumping to a lower level. Even then, you have to hope that other players haven't turned off too much platform real estate, so you turn the clock around by jumping from hexagon to hexagon. It can be accompanied by good luck mixed with some serious skill, but tying a round of Hex-a-Gone has been proven possible. Fall Guys is out now for PC and PlayStation 4. 4.
